DISCOVERY OF A LEAD MINE IN HUNGKONG

Although this island has not hitherto been regarded as a hopeful field for mineral produce, notwithstanding that from time to time slight indications of the existence of minerals in the soil have been met with, yet it would seem probable, judging from a recent discovery, that the colony is not destitute of wealth beneath its surface. In fact the interesting truth is that a lode gulena has been discovered by Mr. J. Grant Smith which, from surface appearances, promises favourably. It is within half-an-honr's walk of the Clock Tower, and supposing that it should prove to be a payable mine, it will be very conveniently situated for practical operations. THE TRADE OF LONDON.

Although Mr. Burns made fun of the theory that to give in to the demands of the dock is bourers would drive shipping away from London it ought not to be dismissed too airily. No doub the fluctuations of international trade are often more difficult to explain than they are even to trace; but there can be no question of its ser estiveness. The current flows into the easier channels with unerring scoursey, and the most trifling obstacle may serve to cause a diversion It will be as well to remember not only that there are other British ports besides London, but also that no inconsiderable fraction of the total amount of London's trade might, under certain conditions, be transferred to foreign ports. A few figures will show how Lendon stands. The following table gives the aggregate value of imports of foreign merchandise and exports of demestic produce at the ports named, for aix specified years:-

Meanwhile it has to be noted that, taking only the imports of foreign merchandise and the experts of domestic produce. Liverpool has done a larger business than . London for the last three years. It also did a larger business in 1883 in these classes of trade. It is in the exports of British produce that the difference is most remarkable. Under this head the totals for the year 1888 are as follows:-London, £50,211,000; Liverpool, £97,187,000. In the next table are shown the exports of foreign and colonial produce from three of the great ports; the exports from Gasgow being omitted as they hardly exceed in value half a million among the ore argues favourably for the value sterling. For purposes of comparison, the total

34,455,000 10,013,000 35,340,000 11,051,000 59.349.000 37,573,000 11,043,000 These two tables indicate the relative importance of London's shipping trade as compared with that of other British ports, and the fluctua-figurescare, they may be enough to suggest the possibility of a large transference of shipping This match was played in Hongkong on Thurs- trade from London to other ports in Great Britain. As a matter of fact, there has been considerable diversion of trade from London of up from H.M.S. Mutine and Cockchafer. The late years. Once divorted, there is no saying when any portion of the trade may be recovered. Then. too, the present difficulties will not with accumulative force in so far as they accentuate various difficulties under which the port of London has laboured for some time past. The possibility that foreign ports like Antwerp, Hamburg, Havre, and others may cut into London's foreign trade is another question that forces itself upon consideration. One of the tables given above shows the value of exports from London and from great Britain generally of foreign and colonial merchandise. London it his way serves us an emporium of trade between foreign countries or between foreign countries and our colonies and dependencies. Continental produce, instead of being brought to London for export to the Fast is being shipped in increasing quantities for direct export at portalike Autworp Hamburg Mars-illes and Trieste both British ships and by foreign lines. Germany, for instance, is sending salt, beet sugar, and German woollen goods direct to India from northern ports; and this direct, trade is showing signs of rapid increase. The wonders of the grotto at Lourdes are similar to those with which faith healers in this country have made us familiar. It will be n tierd that they have arisen out of the same fertile soil—the mutability of a diseased nervous system. It must not be forgotten that nerve pathology includes many cases in which the distinction between fauctional and organic disease is by no means well marked Yat the difference is an important one. Under the former title are included a variety of unstable morbid changes capable of rapid and even tota transformation, under the latter, a group in which the possibilities of improvement are in versely proportional to the organic alteration. Statistical and historical research does not sommend itself to the Oriental mind. A German ethnographer, who is holiday-making in Byria with a view to the perpetration of a book of travels, was lately the guest of a very fine old sheikh, to whom he appealed for material for his contemplated opus. This was the reply he received: "Worthy friend, joy of my life! What you ask of me is wearisome and useless. Though have lived all my life in this village, I have never felt any curiosity to count the house or the inhabitants. What my neighbour carries on his shoulders or the merchant over the way puts in his ships does not concern me. The former circumstances of this district are known only to Heaven, and I have no desire to learn what Nickednesses were indulged in by the unholy Giaour before the sacred sword of lalam gave the place to the true believer. Now a similarly distressing event reported from St. Thomas's. Mr. Charles Brown had nearly completed his term as house surgeon at that institution, and seems to have been worn out with close application to his arduous duties. In this condition he attended two diphtheria cases, and assisted in the extreme operations of tracheotomy. After one of these operations he had a warning in the development of illness which had for one of its characteristics the ominous symptom of sore throat. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Brown went on with his work and assisted in another trashootomy operation. By holding on until this second operation Mr. Brown was all the more virulently attacked.
